In order to obtain a competence certificate, the company must demonstrate that it possesses sufficient technical competence and adequate resources, and has duly fulfilled its obligations under the Contractor's Obligations and Liability Act as well as made the required financial disclosures. The company that applied for and was awarded with the Certificate of Competence is liable for the accuracy of the information submitted to the Construction Quality Association. A company may be removed from the Association's Competence Register by a decision of the Certification Board if the company does not meet the requirements of the RALA Competence and fails to take sufficient corrective actions within a reasonable time.
